

The Middle East question insistently imposes its presence on those concerned with the question of world peace. You agree with me on the necessity of establishing a lasting and just peace in the area. We are all responsible, before history and the coming generations, for building up the edifice of world peace on the basis of justice.

(From a speech at the dinner banquet given by the German President Walter Scheel, March 30 1976)