Survey Methodology

The survey was carried out March 15 – April 2, 2019 online from a nationally representative sample of Nielsen Scarborough’s probability-based panel, originally recruited by mail and telephone using a random sample of adults provided by Survey Sampling International. The poll was conducted among a national poll of 3,015 respondents, with a margin of error of +/- 1.78%. Overall, the sample was adjusted to reflect population estimates (Scarborough USA+/Gallup) for Americans. The survey variables balanced through weighting were: age, gender, race/ethnicity, household income, level of education, census regional division, and political party affiliation.

Valuable assistance was provided by Neil Schwartz, Scott Willoth, and January Lee from Nielsen Scarborough. Brittany Kyser and Connor Kopchick were particularly helpful.

As you may know, when some families trying to enter the U.S. illegally at the southern border have been caught and detained, U.S. officials have separated parents from their children. Do you think this separation of parents and children is acceptable, unacceptable, or haven't you heard enough about it to say?

■ Republicans ■ Democrats ■ Independents ■ Total

When immigrants and their children are detained at the U.S. border for coming into the country illegally, do you think the U.S. should do everything it can to keep such families together, even if it means that fewer face criminal prosecution, or should the U.S. do everything it can to prosecute immigrants entering illegally, even if it means their families are separated?

When the U.S. government is deciding which immigrants to admit to this country, should priority be given to people who have family members already living in the U.S., or should priority be given to people based on education, job skills and work experience?

As you may know, the Secretary of Homeland Security has the authority to give Temporary Protected Status (TPS) to individuals already in the United States, who are nationals of countries undergoing armed conflict, natural disasters, epidemics, or other crises that would make it unsafe for them to return. There are estimated to be over 400,000 people under this program and most TPS holders have been in this country for over a decade. Under the program, individuals with Temporary Protected Status (TPS) can reside, work, and travel throughout the United States. Currently there are ten countries designated for TPS, including Haiti, El Salvador, Syria, and South Sudan.

Do you believe the program should be terminated and individuals currently protected be either forced to return to their country of origin or to another, third country?
